Preface

When The Southern Historical Collection: A Guide to Manuscripts was completed in 1970, replacing a publication issued more than a generation earlier, weary staff members resolved never to allow it to become as outdated as its predecessor. To those who had just completed a guide to the accumulation of decades, it seemed a small matter to plan modest supplements at regular intervals of five years. When we realized that the first such supplement, projected for 1975, would coincide with the retirement of J. Isaac Copeland as Director of the Southern Historical Collection, we became especially anxious to issue it as a tribute to him.

By 1975, it appeared that an increased workload, caused partially by the Guide's wider dissemination of information on our holdings, might keep us from meeting our goal. That we have been able to issue the supplement almost as soon as planned we owe to a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The grant enabled us to employ an additional staff member who could concentrate upon the preparation of the supplement with no responsibility for other work. In the fall Karen Luke Jackson, a former staff member, was employed for this purpose. We were fortunate that someone familiar with our holdings and our methods could perform the preliminary work on the project. When she was appointed to fill a vacancy on our regular staff, she was still available to help her successor get started. We were again fortunate in finding Everard H. Smith, III to complete the project and edit the supplement. We owe to his splendid organizational and editorial ability not only the publication here presented but also useful suggestions for refinements of our procedures and terminology. Our entire staff is grateful to these two persons and to the National Endowment, which made their work possible.

I am personally greatly indebted to many other people. Margaret Child, of the staff of the National Endowment, was invariably courteous and helpful whenever I called on her for information and advice. Kathryn Rives of the University's Office of Research Administration and John Leonarz of the Office of Contracts and Grants aided in plans for the project, and Mr. Leonarz was my ever-helpful consultant in problems of accounting and administration. James F. Govan, University Librarian, and Alfred Sharlip, Laura Warren, Ann Register, Cloe Ann Canada, and Jack Brown of the Library's administrative staff helped to overcome numerous problems. To all of these I owe both the acknowledgement that they are in no way responsible for whatever errors and omissions we have made and my deep gratitude for their assistance.

The entire staff of the Southern Historical Collection has collaborated on this project. Richard A. Shrader, Reference Archivist, conferred daily with the editor to provide the knowledge and guidance of an experienced staff member. Ellen Neal, Technical Services Archivist, frequently took time from her busy schedule to supply constructive advice and interpretation of the records maintained by her section. The descriptions prepared by her assistant, Susan Ballinger, were a great benefit. Catherine Bennington handled correspondence and supplies adeptly. Michael G. Martin, Jr., senior staff member in the Manuscripts Department, assisted in initial planning and in solving later administrative problems. Both the editor and I are grateful for this fine cooperation.

We also owe a great debt to our predecessors: to the editors of the 1970 Guide, Susan S. Blosser and Clyde N. Wilson, Jr., who paved the way and developed the format; to Anna Brooke Allan, who taught us most of what we know about the care of manuscripts and wrote many of the descriptions on which our work is based; and to J. Isaac Copeland, whose faith in and support of his staff made possible a publication we had thought impossible in 1970 and the beginning of a project we had begun to think impossible in 1975.

Introduction

This volume is designed to complement and update the Guide to Manuscripts published by the Southern Historical Collection in 1970. Its general format is similar to the 1970 Guide. It provides a summary of changes in, and additions to, previously existing groups, plus a listing of new groups added between 1970 and 1975. A comprehensive index is included following the group descriptions.

Entries in the Supplementary Guide which refer to the 3900 groups originally described in 1970 embrace corrections (errata in the Guide that would affect the researcher), revisions (changes in restrictions, withdrawn or transferred material), additions (new material), and new related groups. The entries add to, but do not supersede, the descriptions prepared in 1970. When the nature of the change has affected the title line of the group description, a revised title line has been provided. Small, undifferentiated, or genealogical additions to existing groups have generally not been included in these descriptions.

Entries relating to the 150 new groups added to the Collection during the past five years contain the group's formal name (in boldface), its inclusive dates, an item count, and a brief description of contents. Dates in parentheses are birth and death dates. The left margin holds the group number and the state or states most prominent in it. Several groups omitted in the 1970 Guide have also been included because of substantial additions.

The item count for all groups listed in the Supplementary Guide has been recalculated according to a new method which differentiates elements within the group and facilitates the reporting of audio-visual resources. Items (papers and other materials stored in folders), volumes, reels of tape and film, and audio discs have each been counted separately. Thus a group previously described as

is now described as 150 items (in part copies) plus 4 vols and 1 reel (microfilm).

An exact item count has been prepared for all groups comprising less than a linear foot of material. For larger groups this figure is given in feet.

Groups labeled restricted require varying procedures and permissions for use. Those interested in using such groups should write the Collection in advance for information. Material under seal is closed to investigators, usually for a specified period of time, under terms imposed by the original donors or their successors.

The group descriptions in both the Guide and Supplementary Guide furnish brief overviews of the diverse materials in the Southern Historical Collection. They cannot, however, substitute for the detailed surveys and indices available in its quarters. The Collection staff encourages visitors and welcomes thousands of investigators from around the world every year.

Prospective visitors should write prior to their arrival to acquaint the staff with the nature of their research. Information regarding hours, accommodations, and transportation will be furnished on request. Unrestricted materials are open to researchers upon application, but advance arrangements may be necessary for access to certain large or restricted groups, or for the use of audio-visual materials requiring special facilities.

Correspondents who are unable to visit the Collection cannot be provided with full service. Staff members can neither undertake projects requiring lengthy searching nor photocopy large portions of groups. Mail inquiries should be as specific as possible and should include a statement of the nature, purpose, and subject of the investigation. Should extensive research be necessary to answer an inquiry, the correspondent may be asked to engage a research assistant. All communications should be addressed to the Southern Historical Collection, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Wilson Library 024-A, Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514.

The publication of this volume has been in every sense a collaborative effort, and I am grateful to the many people who have contributed to it. My assistants John C. Lassiter and Valerie R. Baugh have arranged the index and prepared the final copy for the printers with painstaking efficiency. Harold Wilson, Carlean Gurganus, and Joyce Comar of the University Printing Department have furnished expert guidance through the intricacies of the publication process. My greatest debt, to Dr. Carolyn A. Wallace, is shared by all those associated with the Southern Historical Collection, for without her perseverance and support this project could never have been accomplished.

Index

For complete instructions regarding the organization and use of this index, the reader should consult the Guide to Manuscripts issued by the Southern Historical Collection in 1970. The following entries refer only to the group descriptions in this volume. Investigators should also consult the detailed indices available in the quarters of the Collection.

Index entries are of four types: 1) names of manuscript groups (in boldface), 2) people, 3) places, and 4) subjects, some of which are subdivided. Individuals have been catalogued for a particular group only when substantially represented therein; no attempt has been made to provide a comprehensive listing of correspondents. Place name entries for Southern states have been subdivided by county, with references to individual cities being included under the counties in which they are located. Subject categories are organized under broad topics, and have been subdivided in certain cases to render them more manageable. Civil War military groups are indexed for theatres of operation, but not for individual battles, units, or places.
